A Jabłonki History

Jabłonki — the art of celebrating apples. The festival begins when the apple trees burst into bloom, blanketing themselves in snow-white flowers, and ends when the time comes to harvest their sweet fruit.

In Poland, often referred to as the "Orchard of Europe," apple trees grow everywhere. Some claim they've colonized our country and taken over our minds. Apple juice, they say, even courses through our veins. That must be true: apples, after all, are for us a synonym of beauty and taste, a promise of adventure and magical rituals.

Poland is one of the world's largest apple producers, with Polish orchards making up about 30% of the orchard area across the entire European Union, even though Poland itself only constitutes 7% of the EU's total land area. Apples are the domain of Polish horticulture – the annual production of these native fruits amounts to as much as three million tons.

Today, we celebrate the planting of 340 flowering apple trees across New York City in honor of the mutual heritage and Polish-American friendship.

The histories of Poland and the United States are deeply intertwined. Many Poles have had a significant impact on shaping American history and culture. In addition, many Americans have developed a special and selfless love for Poland, standing in its defense on both military and political fronts.

This planting project, completed by the State of Poland Foundation, Consulate General of the Republic of Poland and the Tree Time Foundation, symbolizes the historical and cultural ties as well as the indissoluble bond of these two nations.
